DIED IN THICK OF SPECTACULAR COURT BATTLE

Most Renowned Orator of Recent Decades Peacefully Succumbs to Apoplexy About 3:40 O'Clock Sunday Afternoon

Stricken in Hills of Tennessee, Espousing Cause of Fundamentalism; Made Many Speeches During the Week End

(By United Press)

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—In the thick of the most spectacular, if not the most important battle of his strenuous career, William Jennings Bryan has passed away suddenly down here in the Tennessee hills where of late he has moved as the great apostle of fundamentalism.

Death came only a few hours after the commoner had won a score of ovations from thousands of natives whom he had addressed from the rear platform of his train—cheers and applause of which through his long career he probably received more than any living man. A world figure, the most renowned orator of recent decades, known because of his political and religious activities from one end of the earth to the other, his passing occurred amongst people of the simple and lasting faith that was his and in the homely surroundings he most loved.

Three times a candidate for president of the United States and for thirty years a dominant figure in the political deliberations of the Democratic party, Bryan, when he died, was centering his whole thought on a nationwide campaign to balk the teaching of evolution in the public schools. From free silver and a single moral standard for men and women to world peace and the word of God supreme, Bryan created and pursued issues relentlessly throughout his long career.

Elated with the reception that had been accorded him at Winchester, Tenn., where he delivered a stirring speech before a record crowd, Bryan yesterday returned to the home of Richard Rodgers, his headquarters during the recent Scopes' trial.

"I never felt better in my life," he said again and again in response to inquiries of his friends who feared his activities in speech-making over the week-end might prove too great a strain. He ate a hearty meal, then he decided to take a nap and went to his room connecting with the front porch.

Mrs. Bryan seated herself on the porch to read the newspaper. A few minutes later Mrs. C. Stevens, Mrs. Bryan's housekeeper passed through the commoner's room.

"I think I'm going to get a good sleep," Bryan told her cheerfully.

Some time later Mrs. Bryan heard a faint groan in her husband's room. About 4 o'clock she became nervous and asking William H. McCartney, the family chauffeur, to go to her husband and see if he was all right. McCartney was unable to arouse Bryan. Realizing something was wrong, he called a neighbor, A. B. Andrews, who summoned Dr. A. C. Broyles and Dr. W. F. Thomison. Bryan had been dead twenty minutes, the physicians said. Death occurred about 3:40 P. M. Apoplexy, accompanied by a cerebral hemorrhage was the cause, according to Dr. Broyles. Dr. Raymond Wallace, Chattanooga physician who made an examination of Bryan last Friday, said he believed Bryan died of heart failure instead of apoplexy. His examination revealed, according to Dr. Wallace, a slight dilation of the heart which missed beats. Blood pressure was normal, although the ankles showed a slight swelling which the physician attributed to faulty heart action. Dr. Wallace said he advised rest and a change of diet, but that same day Bryan went to Jasper and made a speech followed by another at Winchester Saturday.

Did Not Stir When Called

It was a few minutes after four that McCartney entered Bryan's room and called him. The commoner did not stir and McCartney shook him.

"He didn't awaken, so I shook him again," the chauffeur told the United Press. "Then I placed my hand on his forehead to see if he was all right and he felt cold to my touch. I drew the sheet aside and felt his face. It was cold too. His hands were cold and then I knew he was dead. Mrs. Bryan sat outside the door reading and I called her. I told her I was afraid something had happened to Mr. Bryan."

"She dropped her papers and her face went white. She knew he was dead before she came in and touched him."

"Darling, darling," she called, and went to his side and shook him. He didn't answer and she fell across the bed crying. I went in and helped her away and out on the porch where she dropped into a chair. I called to Mr. Hicks and some of the others. I do not know who it was came running."

"His lawyer friends went into his room and came out solemn faced. One of them cried a little. We called a doctor, but he couldn't do anything but tell us something we already knew, that Mr. Bryan was dead."

The physicians gently drew the sheet over the commoner's face and then attended Mrs. Bryan who was fighting against a collapse. After the first outburst of grief she bore up bravely. She reclined on a bed in the adjoining room and lay sobbing faintly while preliminary arrangements were made for disposal tion of her husband's body. News of the death spread rapidly through the town. Bryan's death came with a tremendous shock. Only a few hours before the end he had talked with friends of the big battle ahead in connection with the Scopes' case. Friends suggested he take a brief vacation before continuing the fight, but enthusiastic over his recent victory in obtaining the conviction of Scopes, Bryan refused to rest. At the time of his death, one of Bryan's chief ambitions was for the creation of the proposed Bryan University at Dayton. Less than five hours before he died, the commoner had been the center of interest at the Southern Methodist church where he lead the congregation in prayer. Later he conferred with C. Wesley Hicks, choir director, on the music for the sermon on "What Shall I Do With Jesus?" which Bryan was to have delivered last night. Bryan asked that two hymns be sung, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought" and "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go."

Following the services practically every member of the audience shook hands with him.

Bryan's three children, William Jennings, Jr., of Los Angeles, Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owens of Mount Vernon, Ohio, and Mrs. Richard L. Hargraves all are on their way to Dayton. They are expected to arrive Tuesday.

White to be Mourning Color

White will be the mourning color which will be observed by relatives, it was announced. In compliance with a wish that he had expressed to his wife, Bryan will be buried in Arlington Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Today the great commoner, whose voice for 30 years has espoused doctrines ranging from international peace to free silver, lay in state on the front lawn of the Richard Rodgers home. From two to five P. M. scores of folks who but a few days ago trudged in from far and near to see him fight in the Scopes' trial, passed by the bier to pay him final homage. Tomorrow the body will again be taken out so that those who did not see him today may have another opportunity. On the porch of the home Mrs. Bryan, sitting in her wheel chair, watched the slow file of Dayton citizens pass by.

Wednesday his widow will take the body to Washington for burial among the graves of many American heroes. The Southern railway offered to furnish a special train, but Mrs. Bryan declined. "It will be too much show," she said, so the body will be taken in her care on a special car only.

NEBRASKA COLONY ON BIG PELICAN LAKE MOURNS FOR BRYAN

The Nebraska colony of prominent people sojourning in the Brainerd Lake region on Big Pelican lake was shocked to hear of the death of Bryan.

J. J. Thomas of Seward, Neb., former candidate for United States senator on the democratic ticket, and associated with Bryan since 1892 in many of his campaigns, said his death was a great loss to him.

Bryan, said Mr. Thomas, was to conduct a pilgrimage to the Holy Land next February and considered that the crowning achievement of his career. Mrs. Bryan was to accompany him. Among others in the party were to be Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Talbot. Talbot was Bryan's law partner in Lincoln, Neb., when Bryan was a congressman. Mr. Talbot, who is head Consul of the Modern Woodmen of America, is summing at Hackensack, north of Brainerd, and was deeply grieved to hear of his friend's sudden death.

It was in New York at the democratic national convention that Bryan turned to Thomas and said that was his last convention, that he would leave the field of politics and devote his time henceforth to religion.

E. E. Betzer, editor of the Seward, Neb., Blade, a newspaper man nearly a half-century, said he knew Bryan well, and so did Ralph E. Johnson, national organizer of the Modern Woodmen of the World. The trio of Nebraskans visited the Dispatch office this morning to substantiate news of Bryan's death.

FRENCH DRIVE RIFFIANS BACK

TRIBES REPORTED DESERTING KRIM AS REBELS FACE DEFEAT

Paris, July 27.—Riffian forces of Abdel Krim are retreating northward in the valley of the Ouergha and their pressure against Taza has been relieved, according to advices today.

This caused general impression in the capital that the Moroccan situation has been somewhat lightened, though the climax has not yet been reached.

Tribes friendly to Krim were reported deserting him to support the French, as they viewed the tide of battle as turning against them.

Region Cleared

The foreign office announced that all the immediate region north of the Ouergha, where the Riffians have been entrenched for some time, has now been cleared of them by the French victories.

Fez reports said that the action against the Riffs around Bab Mouroudj is progressing favorably.

Two tribes are reported negotiating with the French for an agreement.

Reinforcements for the Riffian campaign are arriving in Morocco, including fresh troops from the Ruhr, who have had nothing more strenuous to do for many months than mild guard duty.

These arrivals presage the big smash promised by Premier Painleve and the military chieftains.

Master Stroke Planned

Meanwhile, Marshal Petain, surveying the whole problem of dealing a master stroke against Krim, plans to confer next week with the Spanish dictator, Primo de Rivera, at Tetuan. In this conference it is assumed Spanish-French military collaboration will be considered.

Pressure on the Taza region had caused considerable anxiety but the northward Riffian retirement raises hopes here that the tide is now beginning to turn against Krim, and the promised smash will be able to bring him to terms.

GLORIA GOULD WILL MANAGE MOVIE THEATER

New York, July 27.—Gloria Gould, who foreswore society and at the age of 19 had achieved no small fame as an aesthetic dancer and a writer, to say nothing of being a wife and mother, will add the management of a Broadway motion picture theater to her many activities.

Gloria, daughter of the late George Jay Gould, recently expressed some ideas of her own on running a movie house. She would have it intimate, smart, and, most important of all, run entirely by women from the opening in the little coop above the balcony to the musicians. Miss Gould was proffered a contract as managing directress of the new Embassy theater.

"One of the ambitions of my life," Miss Gould, who in private life is Mrs. Henry A. Bishop, Jr., "has always been to have a small, intimate theater of my own. I got this ambition from my mother, who was Edith Kingdom, the actress. I did not want a doll's house or one of those theaters that require a lot of backing to start them and a lot of persuasion to get an audience, but a real moneymaking proposition. I never thought my ambitions would be gratified, but now they have turned over the Embassy theater to me and given me carte blanche. Its going to be an all woman's theater. Every official and employee will be a woman."

"And the first picture is going to be 'The Merry Widow.'"

200 SQUARE MILE AREA IS AFFECTED

COMMUNICATION FACILITIES ARE CRIPPLED NEAR TWIN CITIES

TREES UPROOTED, ROOFS TORN OFF IN SOME COMMUNITIES

(By United Press)

St. Paul, July 27. — High winds and hail which struck the Twin Cities late Sunday severely damaged crops, crippled communication facilities, uprooted trees and tore off roofs in an adjacent area of 200 square miles.

Thousands of picnickers and bathers taking advantage of the warm Sunday afternoon were sent scurrying for cover when the storm broke. Telephone, telegraph and light wires on a 20 mile front from Savage to Jordan were virtually wiped out. Farm buildings, lake cottages, trees and automobiles suffered from the tornado-like wind. Crops were flattened in places in the Minnesota River Valley and eastward by the hail. Three persons were slightly injured near Shakopee when five farm buildings collapsed. Near Prior Lake uncut grain was beaten out of sight and corn was reduced to a pulp by the heavy hail accompanying the rain and wind.

Mott, N. D., July 27.—Hail cut a swath seven miles wide through Hettinger and Adams counties late Sunday, causing heavy damage to crops. Many fields will be a total loss. The storm passed through the town of Hettinger and unusually large hail stones shattered many windows.

HAIL DID NO DAMAGE IN BRAINERD SECTION

So far as could be learned, the light hail storm of Sunday afternoon did no damage to crops locally, according to County Agent E. G. Roth. The hard rain which fell with the hail may have lodged some of the heavy grain, in the opinion of the county agent, and this grain will be damaged if it is too ripe to straighten up again.

In the city the rain came in such torrents that the catch basins could not handle the water fast enough, and a number in basements were flooded as a result.

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—In the thick of the most spectacular, if not the most important battle of his strenuous career, William Jennings Bryan has passed away suddenly down here in the Tennessee hills where of late he has moved as the great apostle of fundamentalism.

TRIBES REPORTED DESERTING KRIM AS REBELS FACE DEFEAT

Paris, July 27.—Riffian forces of Abdel Krim are retreating northward in the valley of the Ouergha and their pressure against Taza has been relieved, according to advices today.

This caused general impression in the capital that the Moroccan situation has been somewhat lightened, though the climax has not yet been reached.

Tribes friendly to Krim were reported deserting him to support the French, as they viewed the tide of battle as turning against them.

Region Cleared
The foreign office announced that all the immediate region north of the Ouergha, where the Riffians have been entrenched for some time, has now been cleared of them by the French victories.

Fez reports said that the action against the Riffs around Bab Moureddj is progressing favorably.

Two tribes are reported negotiating with the French for an agreement.

Reinforcements for the Riffian campaign are arriving in Morocco, including fresh troops from the Ruhr, who have had nothing more strenuous to do for many months than mild guard duty.

These arrivals presage the big smash promised by Premier Painleve and the military chiefs.

Master Stroke Planned
Meanwhile, Marshal Petain, surveying the whole problem of dealing a master stroke against Krim, plans to confer next week with the Spanish dictator, Prime de Rivera, at Tetuan.

In this conference it is assumed Spanish-French military collaboration will be considered.

Pressure on the Taza region had caused considerable anxiety but the northward Riffian retirement raises hopes here that the tide is now beginning to turn against Krim, and the promised smash will be able to bring him to terms.

CHARGED WITH PERFORMING AN ILLEGAL OPERATION

(By United Press)
 Fargo, N. D., July 27.—Dr. D. C. Darrow charged with second degree murder for the death of Jessie Stejskal was called for a preliminary hearing before Justice J. N. Bingham late today. The hearing scheduled for this morning was set over until this afternoon. Dr. Darrow is alleged to have performed an illegal operation upon the young woman who was found dead in his office. He denied that he performed the operation and said she came to him for help. Dr. Darrow has been at liberty under $10,000 cash bond which he supplied from his fortune. His office in the Huntington Block has been dismantled.

HARVESTING SMALL GRAINS NEAR WINONA

Winona, Minn., July 27.—With harvesting of small grains well started in this section, reports indicate a bumper crop.

Barley and oats are returning yields above normal in the area, which includes seven neighboring counties. With fair weather harvesting of these crops is expected to be completed by the end of the week.

Rye is normal in some sections of this part of the state and below average in others. Corn prospects are the brightest in years, with the crop reported ten days to three weeks in advance of other years.

GLORIA GOULD WILL MANAGE MOVIE THEATER

New York, July 27.—Gloria Gould, who foreswore society and at the age of 19 had achieved no small fame as an aesthetic dancer and a writer, to say nothing of being a wife and mother, will add the management of a Broadway motion picture theater to her many activities.

Gloria, daughter of the late George Jay Gould, recently expressed some ideas of her own on running a movie house. She would have it intimate, smart, and, most important of all, run entirely by women from the opening in the little coop above the balcony to the musicians. Miss Gould was proffered a contract as managing directress of the new Embassy theater.

"One of the ambitions of my life," Miss Gould, who in private life is Mrs. Henry A. Bishop, Jr., "has always been to have a small, intimate theater of my own. I got this ambition from my mother, who was Edith Kingdom, the actress. I did not want a doll's house or one of those theaters that require a lot of backing to start them and a lot of persuasion to get an audience, but a real money-making proposition. I never thought my ambitions would be gratified, but now they have turned over the Embassy theater to me and given me carte blanche. Its going to be an all woman's theater. Every official and employee will be a woman."

"And the first picture is going to be 'The Merry Widow.'"

Camp Meade

Washington, July 27.—Camp Meade, well known to many world war veterans, will soon be transformed into a model training center, according to Major General Hines, chief of Staff of the Army.

Under the new housing plan to be submitted to the next Congress Camp Meade is scheduled to be rebuilt and made into one of the largest army training camps in the country.

200 SQUARE MILE AREA IS AFFECTED

COMMUNICATION FACILITIES ARE CRIPPLED NEAR TWIN CITIES

TREES UPROOTED, ROOFS TORN OFF IN SOME COMMUNITIES

(By United Press)
St. Paul, July 27.—High winds and hail which struck the Twin Cities late Sunday severely damaged crops, crippled communication facilities, uprooted trees and tore off roofs in an adjacent area of 200 square miles.

Thousands of picnickers and bathers taking advantage of the warm Sunday afternoon were sent scurrying for cover when the storm broke.

Telephone, telegraph and light wires on a 20 mile front from Savage to Jordan were virtually wiped out. Farm buildings, lake cottages, trees and automobiles suffered from the tornado-like wind. Crops were flattened in places in the Minnesota River Valley and eastward by the hail. Three persons were slightly injured near Shakopee when five farm buildings collapsed. Near Prior Lake uncut grain was beaten out of sight and corn was reduced to a pulp by the heavy hail accompanying the rain and wind.

HAIL RUINS CROPS NEAR BRECKINRIDGE

Breckinridge, Minn., July 27.—A hail storm near Tyler, N. D., late Sunday ruined crops over a section six miles long and a mile and a half wide. Telephone and telegraph lines were damaged.

HAIL CUTS SWATH IN 2 N. D. COUNTIES

Mott, N. D., July 27.—Hail cut a swath seven miles wide through Hettinger and Adams counties late Sunday, causing heavy damage to crops. Many fields will be a total loss. The storm passed through the town of Hettinger and unusually large hail stones shattered many windows.

HAIL DID NO DAMAGE IN BRAINERD SECTION

So far as could be learned, the light hail storm of Sunday afternoon did no damage to crops locally, according to County Agent E. G. Roth. The hard rain which fell with the hail may have lodged some of the heavy grain, in the opinion of the county agent, and this grain will be damaged if it is too ripe to straighten up again.

In the city the rain came in such torrents that the catch basins could not handle the water fast enough, and a number in basements were flooded as a result.

More Widows on Coast

Washington, July 27.—California now claims more widows according to her population than any other state. About 13 per cent of the women over 15 are widows, according to the census bureau. North Dakota has the lowest percentage.

First Census Taken

Jerusalem, July 27.—Until two years ago no census of the population of Palestine had been taken since the time of Solomon. In 1923 there were 83,794 Jews in the country; today the total is estimated at 108,000.

vincial police, a month ago declared that advent of legalized 4.4 beer was practically putting the bootleggers out of business. So his officers found. There have been efforts of inebriates in police court to prove they became intoxicated from drinking the foamy suds, but inevitably it was shown there was something else under their belt.

The breweries of the province entered into the early business with a vim and dash of bright prospects. The establishments which make preparations to bottle the beer also were prosperous for a time. Today the breweries are stocked to the ceiling.

Now comes the irony of the situation. Two hotels have been found serving beer, two glasses for 25 cents, that was really intoxicating. It was served with the nonchalance as was the 4.4 beer.

Friday two hotel men were in police court. The beer found on sale had 6, 8 and 10 per cent alcoholic content. The hotel men have put the onus on the breweries. The kegs came in their regular legalized way.

"Didn't know it was stronger," is their defense. "We could not now sell three kegs of 4.4 beer in a week," declared one hotel manager.

Fight Came First

The kindly old party saw two men fighting with more gusto than damage to themselves. He hurried up and separated the combatants. "Now, then," said he, "what's the argument about?" The warriors glared at each other while a youthful bystander piped up: "Argument, boss? There's no argument! They're fightin'! Tomorrow will be the argument!"

vincial police, a month ago declared that advent of legalized 4.4 beer was practically putting the bootleggers out of business. So his officers found. There have been efforts of inebriated in police court to prove they became intoxicated from drinking the foamy suds, but inevitably it was shown there was something else under their belt.

The breweries of the province entered into the early business with a vim and dash of bright prospects. The establishments which made preparations to bottle the beer also were prosperous for a time. Today the breweries are stocked to the ceiling.

Now comes the irony of the situation. Two hotels have been found serving beer, two glasses for 25 cents, that was really intoxicating. It was served with the nonchalance as was the 4.4 beer.

Friday two hotel men were in police court. The beer found on sale had 6, 8 and 10 per cent alcoholic content. The hotel men have put the onus on the breweries. The kegs came in their regular legalized way.

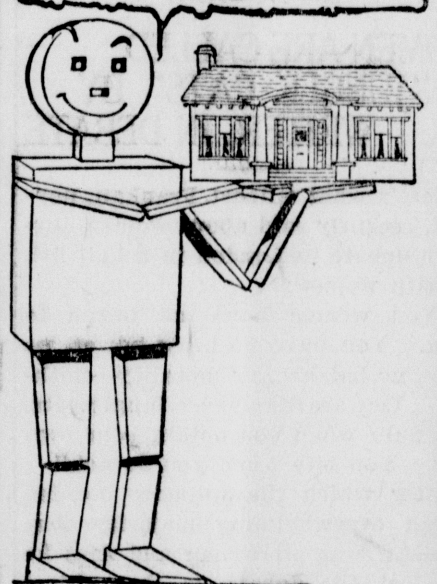

"Didn't know it was stronger," is their defense. "We could not now sell three kegs of 4.4 beer in a week," declared one hotel manager.

Fight Came First

The kindly old party saw two men fighting with more gusto than damage to themselves. He hurried up and separated the combatants. "Now, then," said he, "what's the argument about?" The warriors glared at each other while a youthful bystander piped up: "Argument, boss? There's no argument! They're fighting! Tomorrow will be the argument!"

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN PASSED AWAY SUDDENLY

A special guard of the American Legion will accompany it. The funeral service in Washington probably will be held Friday. The widow, an invalid who cannot move about except with assistance, stoically directed arrangements for her husband's funeral, while awaiting relatives now enroute here. The townspeople suggested that Bryan's body lie in state in the court house where only a few days ago he participated with all his energies to keep the written word supreme.

Mrs. Bryan, however, vetoed this plan. It was her preference that complete simplicity mark all the arrangements so the front lawn of the Rodgers' home was selected as the place where friends and followers might go to see the commoner for the last time.

DEMOCRATIC LEADER FOR A GENERATION

William Jennings Bryan was the greatest Democrat of his generation. His absolute party reign ended when he threw the votes he controlled to Woodrow Wilson in the Baltimore National Convention of 1912 and saw a new sun rise on the hosts of Democracy.

Since the Chicago Democratic Convention in 1896 he had ruled his party almost absolutely. Three times he had been named for the party leadership and as many times been defeated at the polls. And it takes ability in a beaten leader to continue leading.

The story of his accession to the throne will live as long as the political history of the United States. The Chicago convention of 1896 was controlled by the free silver men. Silver was the issue. The gold men, however, were making a bitter fight, "Silver Dick" Bland of Missouri was the probable nominee. As the debate grew bitter, a young man, with flowing black hair, made his way to the platform.

"Who is he?" asked one. "Oh, just a dub congressman from Nebraska. They'll choke him off before long."

Half an hour later the entire convention was cheering "The Dub from Nebraska," while the state standards were carried in parade down the aisles and grouped in front of Nebraska.

Bland Was Besten

David B. Hill, one of the great Democrats, was seated down in front. When Bryan started, Hill looked bored and yawned. When Bryan reached his climax and thundered:

"You shall not tread upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold"—and even before that never-to-be forgotten parade of standards about the hall, Hill turned to one of his friends and said: "That ends Bland's and every other boom in the convention."

It did. Bryan was the nominee. Strange to say, the speech wasn't new, either. Bryan had delivered it, climax and all, a dozen times, but never under such dramatic circumstances.

Bryan made a wonderful campaign. He traveled 18,000 miles, spoke at every stopping place and was defeated by Wm. McKinley by 271 electoral votes to 176 for Bryan. Senator Mark Hanna of Ohio had carefully planned the campaign for McKinley. The "free silver" issue was held up to scorn as the fallacy of a Populism gone mad—an evil that combined all the weaknesses and, at the same time, all the destructive forces of Greenbackism and Populism. Bryan was derided as a second "Sockless Jerry" Simpson: "Free silver would close the factories and the working man would starve," was the cry of thousands of orators and hundreds of newspapers. "Full dinner pail" parades were organized by employers all over the nation. McKinley made a "front lawn" campaign at Canton, O., the forerunner of the "front porch" campaigns of later years. McKinley was posed as the champion of conservatism, the defender of property rights. Suave, dignified, imposing, McKinley looked the part. The Republican press spoke of Bryan in terms compared with which Chas. Evans Hughes' characterization of the Bolsheviks was a compliment. To the Republican orators Bryan was a wild-eyed torch-bearer, ready to wreck the United States.

Killed by Free Silver

Free silver killed Bryan politically insofar as elective office-holding was concerned, as dead as oil killed others; gold some, and free trade others. Although the 1896 campaign was the only one that Bryan made on a strictly free silver platform, the mass of the voting public could never be convinced that Bryan was not a hair-brained theorist, whose cult was ruin. Long after the body of Mark Hanna had rusted to dust in a Cleveland cemetery, the effect of the bitter campaign of 1896 kept its veto on Bryan's elective ambitions.

In many ways, Bryan was a statesman in advance of his times. He was accustomed to say that economic progress, while it made legal establishment of Free Silver, 16 to 1, unnecessary, had proved the soundness of his theory. He lived to see four of his pet ideas become the law of the land. Prohibition, Woman Suffrage, Direct Election of United States Senators and Direct Primaries.

Bryan was a prophet, not without honor, but without elective success in his own country.

The mass of the voters cheered him, but wouldn't vote for him. His issue of imperialism fell flat. His issue of governmental ownership of the railroads was rejected by his generation. Whether time will vindicate that, as it did other Bryan issues, time only can answer.

Bryan's Last Fight

In the convention of 1920, when James B. Cox of Ohio was selected as the Democratic standard-bearer, Bryan held a proxy and made the fight for a dry plank in the national platform. With Bourke Cockran, he staged one of the greatest debates of a career full of oratory. The erst young form that had electrified the 1896 convention had grown somewhat paunchy, the long, jet black hair of yesterday had begun to turn and was much thinner. But Bryan had the same force, the same magnetism, the same fire, the same easy flow of thought and language, the same eloquence. Cockran, the great Irish orator of Tammany Hall, was cool, keen, logical and incisive. And when it was over the convention rose and cheered its old hero to the echo. For perhaps the last time, Bryan saw the standards of the states plucked from sockets and carried in parade—for him. It was a tribute to the great party leader who was passing—had just passed.

Voted Against Bryan

Then the delegates calmly returned to their seats and voted against Bryan's eloquence and for his opponent's logic and their own personal preferences. It was the party's parting salute to a peerless but stricken political gladiator.

Four years later—a little less—Bryan attended the meeting of the Democratic national convention at Washington and was barely noticed. Gone alike were his friends and foes. Many were dead, including the brilliant Cockran, his San Francisco adversary. Others were retired from politics. Still others had been violently retired by the voters. It was as if Napoleon had returned to the field of Waterloo. "Champ" Clark, on whose ambition Bryan had trampled at Baltimore, had passed on. Woodrow Wilson, estranged, had death's seal already on his bowed head. What Bryan thought as he passed through the throng, no man knows. Bryan never wore his heart on his sleeve and had killed more than one fair young political boom with his own hands. He knew that in politics the man who wields the sword must also perish by the sword. But he made no sign.

Although Bryan had broken years before with the party leaders, he always retained a large following among the masses of his party, in the south and west, especially. He never had been strong in the east. His break with the Wilson forces, when he resigned his office as Secretary of State in 1915, had alienated him from the bulk of the new men who led the party for eight years under Wilson.

Bryan was named to head the Wilson cabinet in 1913, partly because of the part that he took in Wilson's nomination and as a graceful recognition on Wilson's part, but more because Wilson needed the help of the Bryan Congressmen and Senators from the west and south to carry his policies into legislation.

There never was any real friendship between Bryan and Wilson. Both were men accustomed to giving orders, not to taking them. There was too much iron in both constitutions to bend. The result was forecast by friends of both men. When the World War broke, both Wilson and Bryan were pacifists. As it progressed, Bryan adhered more and more to the idea that the United States should withdraw from all European interests and not under any condition allow the United States to be dragged into the conflict. Wilson, at the start, as pacific as Bryan, found himself gravitating the other way. Wilson and his Secretary of State were getting further and further apart on the foreign policy of the United States.

Then came the Lusitania disaster.

Just what happened will remain a secret, unless Bryan divulges it in his memoirs—if he wrote any. The story current in Washington at the time and told by Senator Lodge on the public platform was that the ultimatum to Germany, calling her to account, was written by Bryan and Wilson, and that Bryan included a confidential note, to the effect that Germany could regard this as a matter of form and not worry about it—that it was only a diplomatic gesture. Certain members of the cabinet threatened to resign if any "kicker" appeared in the ultimatum. Garrison was one. Wilson then eliminated the confidential section and Bryan resigned. Bryan believed the unsoftened ultimatum meant war and he was against war.

Wilson issued a categorical denial of the story of a confidential note. So did Secretary Tumulty. Bryan and Garrison refused to talk. Lodge later issued a statement which, in effect, said: "The President denies. The President is always right. Therefore this version is an error."

It was said that the bitter feud between Wilson and Lodge dated from that statement. Wilson regarded the apparent evasion as an insult. He believed an absolute withdrawal was the least apology Lodge could have made.

Be that as it may, the Lusitania ultimatum marked the retirement of Bryan from political life. It was sent minus any confidential note.

Bryan's Early Ambitions

Bryan, from a lad, had four ambitions—to be a farmer, to be a politician, to be a writer and to be a lawyer. He realized all of them.

Bryan was born in Salem, Ill., on March 19, 1860, and, as a boy, was a strong, full-limbed, little fellow, whose chief aims in life seemed to be playing and eating. On both his father's and his mother's side he came of honest right-living, God-fearing people, for both the Bryan and the Jennings families were simple, sturdy, earnest people and deeply religious. They never attained great wealth, but they always had plenty for the care and comfort of their own.

Bryan's father, Silas Lillard Bryan, was a man who backed up his high ideals with a strong character and a great capacity for work. His ancestors are said to be Irish. A certain William Bryan, a big landowner, who lived in Culpepper county, Virginia, more than a hundred years ago, is the first one of the Bryan family whose name is known to his descendants.

William Jennings' mother was Maria Elizabeth Jennings, who was born near Walnut Hill, Ill., in 1834. The Jennings family came from English stock.

Born a Democrat

Bryan's father was a Democrat of Democrats and soon after his marriage entered into public life by serving in the state senate of Illinois for eight years. To this he added 12 years on the circuit bench and then was nominated for congress, but met with defeat. Returning from the bench he devoted his time to his law practice and to church affairs.

Until he was ten years old "Willie" Bryan romped and played and did his share of the chores on a farm a short distance from Salem, which had been purchased by the elder Bryan when William was little more than a toddler.

About this time William was sent to public school. After entering Whipple Academy, one of the preparatory schools of Illinois College at Jacksonville, he suddenly took a deeper interest in his studies and that seriousness of purpose which loomed so strongly in his later life became manifest. If there was a contest, whether of oratory or athletics, Bryan was in it, if possible. Although not particularly fond of baseball or football, he was a good runner and jumper, but his first attempts at declaiming were not so successful. In the various debates and oratorical contests at Illinois College in which he entered it required quite a number of attempts before he carried off a first prize. He persisted, however, and when he graduated in 1881, Bryan was chosen to make the valedictorian address.

It was while going to college at Jacksonville that Bryan met Miss Mary Baird, the daughter of a merchant living in Perry, Ill. Mary Baird also was studying at Jacksonville. There began a love affair that resulted in marriage in 1884, and gave Bryan a wife and a great helper in his political life all in one. Three years later, Bryan, called to Lincoln, Neb., on business, was so impressed with the beauty of the city that he made plans for moving there.

Bryan now entered into public life by becoming an active worker for the Democratic organization and going to the state convention as a delegate. Bryan was elected to congress in the campaign of 1890.

Bryan's activity in congress won him a place on the ways and means committee and then came another important event in his career as public speaker. This was his tariff speech, delivered March 16, 1892.

He now aimed higher and after refusing to be a candidate for re-election to the house in 1894 announced that he would run for the senate.

This campaign gave Bryan his first real taste of defeat, but did not dishearten him. The Republican landslide wiped away his efforts and his opponent, Thurston, was elected.

In the fall of 1894, Bryan entered upon newspaper work as chief of the editorial staff of the Omaha World-Herald, giving much of his time to this work, until the national convention of 1896.

At this time, Bryan also branched out as a lecturer, and in addition to his speechmaking on behalf of the Democratic party he took up Chautauqua work. This was the real beginning of his travels over the United States.

Then came the presidential campaign of 1896 and the Chicago Democratic national convention.

Bryan, after his second defeat for President, started "The Commoner," a political magazine, at Lincoln, which, with his lectures, writing and newspaper work, gave him a comfortable fortune.

The Baltimore Convention

After Bryan's defeat by Taft in 1908, the presidential campaign of 1912 brought Bryan into the public eye again.

As the head of the Nebraska delegation, Bryan went to the Democratic national convention with instructions to support "Champ" Clark, but when the convention deadlocked and the Tammany delegates swung over from Underwood to Clark, Bryan swung his forces to Wilson and gained the latter's nomination.

Prior to this, in 1911, Bryan had issued a public statement, in which he gave up his life's hope, saying:

"I shall never be President, but I would rather go to my grave with the consciousness that I have done right, that I have done all in my power to give to my country the best possible form of government, than to be President."

What Bryan Stood for

These are the things Bryan stood for year by year, during his reign:

A graduated income tax.
Federal license for corporations.
Government operation of telegraphs and telephones.

A double monetary standard.
Tariff for revenue only.

Election of Senators by popular vote.

The President to be ineligible for re-election.

Majority vote to override a Presidential veto.

Popular election of all federal judges.

Limitation of the term of all federal judges.

A three-fourth jury verdict in civil cases.

The initiative and the referendum.

1896

Free silver.

1900

Anti-imperialism—no colonies for the United States.

1906

Government ownership and operation of railroads.

The eight-hour day.

1907

Government guarantee of national bank deposits.

A postal savings bank.

1908

Annihilation of the trusts.

1911

Prohibition.

Publicity for campaign contributions.

World peace by international arbitration.

1915

A referendum on war.

Time won for Bryan quite a few of these issues. Others are still issues. Some are dead beyond recall.

Later in life he left Nebraska and bought a home in Florida, becoming a citizen of that state and taking a hand in its politics.

Foreign notices that are not in English, but read as though they were, sometimes prove misleading to the unskilled observer. For example, there is the case of a certain lady who looked out from her window in a Scandinavian hotel and saw the notice on a building opposite: "Dam Bad Rum." This seemed a queer way of advertising one's wares, but really only indicated that the place provided baths for ladies.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Although Bryan had broken years before with the party leaders, he always retained a large following among the masses of his party, in the south and west, especially. He never had been strong in the east. His break with the Wilson forces, when he resigned his office as Secretary of State in 1915, had alienated him from the bulk of the new men who led the party for eight years under Wilson.

Bryan was named to head the Wilson cabinet in 1913, partly because of the part that he took in Wilson's nomination and as a graceful recognition on Wilson's part, but more because Wilson needed the help of the Bryan Congressmen and Senators from the west and south to carry his policies into legislation.

There never was any real friendship between Bryan and Wilson. Both were men accustomed to giving orders, not to taking them. There was too much iron in both constitutions to bend. The result was forecast by friends of both men. When the World War broke, both Wilson and Bryan were pacifists. As it progressed, Bryan adhered more and more to the idea that the United States should withdraw from all European interests and not under any condition allow the United States to be dragged into the conflict. Wilson, at the start, as pacific as Bryan, found himself gravitating the other way. Wilson and his Secretary of State were getting further and further apart on the foreign policy of the United States.

Then came the Lusitania disaster.

Just what happened will remain a secret, unless Bryan divulges it in his memoirs—if he wrote any. The story current in Washington at the time and told by Senator Lodge on the public platform was that the ultimatum to Germany, calling her to account, was written by Bryan and Wilson, and that Bryan included a confidential note, to the effect that Germany could regard this as a matter of form and not worry about it—that it was only a diplomatic gesture. Certain members of the cabinet threatened to resign if any "kicker" appeared in the ultimatum. Garrison was one. Wilson then eliminated the confidential section and Bryan resigned. Bryan believed the unsoftened ultimatum meant war and he was against war.

Wilson issued a categorical denial of the story of a confidential note. So did Secretary Tumulty. Bryan and Garrison refused to talk. Lodge later issued a statement which, in effect, said: "The President denies. The President is always right. Therefore this version is an error."

It was said that the bitter feud between Wilson and Lodge dated from that statement. Wilson regarded the apparent evasion as an insult. He believed an absolute withdrawal was the least apology Lodge could have made.

Be that as it may, the Lusitania ultimatum marked the retirement of Bryan from political life. It was sent minus any confidential note.

Bryan's Early Ambitions

Bryan, from a lad, had four ambitions—to be a farmer, to be a politician, to be a writer and to be a lawyer. He realized all of them.

Bryan was born in Salem, Ill., on March 19, 1856, and, as a boy, was a strong, full-limbed, little fellow, whose chief aims in life seemed to be playing and eating. On both his father's and his mother's side he came of honest right-living, God-fearing people, for both the Bryan and the Jennings families were simple, sturdy, earnest people and deeply religious. They never attained great wealth, but they always had plenty for the care and comfort of their own.

Bryan's father, Silas Lillard Bryan, was a man who backed up his high ideals with a strong character and a great capacity for work. His ancestors are said to be Irish. A certain William Bryan, a big landowner, who lived in Culpeper county, Virginia, more than a hundred years ago, is the first one of the Bryan family whose name is known to his descendants.

William Jennings' mother was Maria Elizabeth Jennings, who was born near Walnut Hill, Ill., in 1834. The Jennings family came from English stock.

Born a Democrat

Bryan's father was a Democrat of Democrats and soon after his marriage entered into public life by serving in the state senate of Illinois for eight years. To this he added 12 years on the circuit bench and then was nominated for congress, but met with defeat. Returning from the bench he devoted his time to his law practice and to church affairs.

Until he was ten years old "Willie" Bryan romped and played and did his share of the chores on a farm a short distance from Salem, which had been purchased by the elder Bryan when William was little more than a toddler.

About this time William was sent to public school. After entering Whipple Academy, one of the preparatory schools of Illinois College at Jacksonville, he suddenly took a deeper interest in his studies and that seriousness of purpose which loomed so strongly in his later life became manifest. If there was a contest, whether of oratory or athletics, Bryan was in it, if possible. Although not particularly fond of baseball or football, he was a good runner and jumper, but his first attempts at declaiming were not so successful. In the various debates and oratorical contests at Illinois College in which he entered it required quite a number of attempts before he carried off a first prize. He persisted, however, and when he graduated in 1881, Bryan was chosen to make the valedictorian address.

It was while going to college at Jacksonville that Bryan met Miss Mary Baird, the daughter of a merchant living in Perry, Ill. Mary Baird also was studying at Jacksonville. There began a love affair that resulted in marriage in 1884, and gave Bryan a wife and a great helper in his political life all in one. Three years later, Bryan, called to Lincoln, Neb., on business, was so impressed with the beauty of the city that he made plans for moving there.

Bryan now entered into public life by becoming an active worker for the Democratic organization and going to the state convention as a delegate. Bryan was elected to congress in the campaign of 1890.

Bryan's activity in congress won him a place on the ways and means committee and then came another important event in his career as public speaker. This was his tariff speech, delivered March 16, 1892.

He now aimed higher and after refusing to be a candidate for re-election to the house in 1894 announced that he would run for the senate.

This campaign gave Bryan his first real taste of defeat, but did not dishearten him. The Republican landslide wiped away his efforts and his opponent, Thurston, was elected.

In the fall of 1894, Bryan entered upon newspaper work as chief of the editorial staff of the Omaha World-Herald, giving much of his time to this work, until the national convention of 1896.

At this time, Bryan also branched out as a lecturer, and in addition to his speechmaking on behalf of the Democratic party he took up Chautauqua work. This was the real beginning of his travels over the United States.

Then came the presidential campaign of 1896 and the Chicago Democratic national convention.

Bryan, after his second defeat for President, started "The Commoner," a political magazine, at Lincoln, which, with his lectures, writing and newspaper work, gave him a comfortable fortune.

The Baltimore Convention

After Bryan's defeat by Taft in 1908, the presidential campaign of 1912 brought Bryan into the public eye again.

As the head of the Nebraska delegation, Bryan went to the Democratic national convention with instructions to support "Champ" Clark, but when the convention deadlocked and the Tammany delegates swung over from Underwood to Clark, Bryan swung his forces to Wilson and gained the latter's nomination.

Prior to this, in 1911, Bryan had issued a public statement, in which he gave up his life's hope, saying:

"I shall never be President, but I would rather go to my grave with the consciousness that I have done right, that I have done all in my power to give to my country the best possible form of government, than to be President."

What Bryan Stood for

These are the things Bryan stood for year by year, during his reign:

- 1894
- A graduated income tax.
- Federal license for corporations.
- Government operation of telegraphs and telephones.
- A double monetary standard.
- Tariff for revenue only.
- Election of Senators by popular vote.
- The President to be ineligible for re-election.
- Majority vote to override a Presidential veto.
- Popular election of all federal judges.
- Limitation of the term of all federal judges.
- A three-fourth jury verdict in civil cases.
- The initiative and the referendum.
- 1896
- Free silver.
- 1900
- Anti-imperialism—no colonies for the United States.
- 1906
- Government ownership and operation of railroads.
- The eight-hour day.
- 1907
- Government guarantee of national bank deposits.
- A postal savings bank.
- 1908
- Annihilation of the trusts.
- 1911
- Prohibition.
- Publicity for campaign contributions.
- World peace by international arbitration.
- 1915
- A referendum on war.
- Time won for Bryan quite a few of these issues. Others are still issues. Some are dead beyond recall.
- Later in life he left Nebraska and bought a home in Florida, becoming a citizen of that state and taking a hand in its politics.

100 YEARS OLD. SURVIVED IN WORLD WAR THOUGH HE HAD REACHED AGE OF 93.

When this photograph was taken recently in Cleveland, O., Matt Green figured himself just 100 years, six months and two weeks. He has been in the service of Uncle Sam practically all the time since he was 21 when he went into the army after his sweetheart had jilted him. Green was 93 at the time of the World War but managed to get into the service and served in France. He is still a bachelor and believes he will be able to hold out against woman's wiles until the end.

Not What It Seemed

Foreign notices that are not in English, but read as though they were, sometimes prove misleading to the unskilled observer. For example, there is the case of a certain lady who looked out from her window in a Scandinavian hotel and saw the notice on a building opposite: "Dam Bad Rum." This seemed a queer way of advertising one's wares, but really only indicated that the place provided baths for ladies.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Frogs Halted Cyclist

A strange experience befell a Welsh quarry manager while cycling on the road to Dolgelly. When near a lake he came across a large number of frogs of various sizes and many colors swarming all over the road. He tried to thread his way through them, but some of the frogs leaped backward and forward through the spokes of the bicycle wheels, compelling the rider to dismount.—Family Herald.

Folding Electric Ironer

Here at last is what every woman wants, an electric ironer that fits in the kitchen and irons everything—ruffles, shirts and all. It does eight hours' work better in only two hours. Men's trousers are pressed perfectly with this new ironer.

The Ironer That's Almost Human

The dual control is an exclusive feature of the 30 Thor Ironer. Two control levers, one at each end of the 31 inch roll, can be moved at a slight touch of the finger. Moving either one of these levers will set the roll in motion and bring the self-aligning ironing shoe in contact with the piece to be ironed, or instantly stop the roll and release the shoe. The location of these two levers actually places the control of the new Thor Ironer at the finger tips. No special wiring necessary. Thick or very damp pieces pass through the ironer at a lower rate of speed than lighter or drier pieces. A special switch prevents the motor being shut off when the shoe is against the roll. No other ironer has these features. Try the new Thor in your own home or see it demonstrated at

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

ALL Brainerd was shocked when it heard the news of the death of William Jennings Bryan. THE DISPATCH received a special telegram from the United Press in the evening and as no Sunday edition is issued, the next best thing was done to secure publicity. With the cooperation of the New Park and Lyceum theatres special slides were quickly made and the information flashed on the screen, crediting the telegram to the United Press and BRAINERD DISPATCH.

Brainerd people remember Mr. Bryan back in the days of his first campaign, when his train stopped at the depot and he spoke from the rear end platform. He was here several times more, on one occasion taking the prohibition side in a debate at the New Park theatre.

Recently he was prominent in the day's news at the Scopes evolution trial at Dayton, Tennessee. In the court room he testified to his belief in God, the Bible and the miracles therein described. He was proud to let the world know that he was a praying man, and that science had no power to impair his faith in a supernatural creation and in divine oversight of the universe.

As one surveys Mr. Bryan's various activities, political, civic, lecture platform, newspaper work, writing of books, statesmanship, etc., one is impressed with the fact that defeat never laid low his spirit. Like Henry Clay, he was three times a candidate for the presidency and as often defeated. Though failing to achieve the highest honors in the nation, he exerted his influence in favor of Wilson and brought about his nomination and the defeat of Champ Clark. His "cross of gold" speech, delivered at the Chicago coliseum and which brought about his first nomination for the presidency, has been quoted oftener than any other of his words.

Always sincere, democratic in his tastes, he won the admiration of millions of his fellowmen. True, his espousal of free silver came to naught. So did his anti-imperialism. He believed in peace and set about, while secretary of state in Wilson's cabinet, to negotiate 30 peace treaties. There is a perversity in human nature, individual or national, for in spite of such safeguards the world war burst out like a huge holocaust just a year later.

He espoused the cause of prohibition. He not only preached it, but faithfully practiced it. Grape juice was served whenever the then Secretary of State and Mrs. Bryan entertained the diplomatic corps.

His was a great moral influence. He sought to be the friend, counsellor of the common man. His last stand was made at the Scopes trial where he enunciated his faith in God.

He was always an avowed opponent of the Darwin theory of evolution. He best enunciated his stand when in 1923 he addressed the legislature of West Virginia:

"School teachers paid by taxation should not be permitted to teach under the guise of science or philosophy anything that undermines faith in God, impairs belief in the Bible or discredits the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. Evolutionists rob the Saviour of the glory of the virgin birth, the majesty of His deity and the triumph of His resurrection. They weaken faith in the Bible by discarding the miracles and the supernatural and by eliminating from the Bible all that conflicts with their theories. They render the book a scrap of paper."

Strong in influence even after death, the public awaits the printing of his speech which he was not allowed to make at the Scopes trial.

As with all great men, years must elapse before the world will give him that place of honor which his various activities have entitled him to receive.

WEEK-END RAIL EXCURSIONS

THE DISPATCH notes that southern Minnesota is being favored with cheap week-end rail excursions to Chicago and other points. A rate of $7 is being made from St. Paul to Chicago and return. The St. Paul and Northwestern lines offer these rates. The Northern Pacific is conducting a weekly trip to Taylors Falls. The Great Western has declared special rates from all points on its lines into St. Paul and return. The Minneapolis & St. Louis has established week-end round-trip rates from more than a score of smaller cities and towns on its lines into the Twin Cities, with return trip Monday morning required.

You hear of no excursions to our lake region. Why can't the Northern Pacific run a week-end special from the Twin Cities to Brainerd? Taxis and buses here will quickly take the people to any one of the 700 lakes in our Brainerd Lake Region.

If the Chamber of Commerce, the resorts, local hotels and others interested joined in the appeal, probably the Northern Pacific would set in motion this concession for northern Minnesota. As matters now stand, southern Minnesota is getting all the excursion rates.

WE LIKE OUR LAKES

It is with keen approbation that THE DISPATCH notices the many picnics held by local people and local societies and lodges at our various lakes. It gives notice to the world that we ourselves are aware of the recreational advantages of our lakes.

The original discoverers of these beauty spots were the Indians. After them came various hunters and fishermen. The first organized movement from outside was that of the Nebraska colony which annually ran its special trains to Brainerd and then hired teams and wended their way to Big Pelican lake. The children of these early vacationers are now coming and automobiles make the trip in a short period as compared with the early form of locomotion.

If your chickens have any judgment at all, says the Clay County Herald, they always give the impression that your neighbor's garden is a better one than yours.

THE blueberry crop is reported as a scarce one.

Plants That Protect

Coasts From the Sea

In the struggle to defend our coasts from sea encroachments, seaside authorities have no better allies than the hardy tamarisk and shrubby sea blite. These useful plants are as effective in protecting the lonely stretches of our shores as stout sea walls and far-flung groynes, says a writer in London Tit-Bits. Take, for example, Shoreham, on the Sussex coast. This town was seriously affected by the incoming tides until it was found that the loose shingle that fringes the sea could be bound into a resisting mass by the extensive planting of tamarisk, a hardy little plant whose only real enemy is severe frost.

On the Norfolk coast the same method is adopted, but there the shifting shingle is bound with shrubby sea blite, which grows waist high and covers large areas of the coast. The more this plant is ill-treated the stouter it flourishes. Occasionally a violent storm will result in the shrubs being completely embedded in fresh shingle thrown up by the waves. This, in reality, is an advantage, as the plant puts forth new shoots that bind the fresh stones, still further strengthening the land rampart.

"Sports" a Century Ago
Not of Highest Order

Public entertainments in London a hundred or more years ago were more of a sporting than of a dramatic or musical type. In the Observer of a date of 1825 appeared a full report of a dog fight, at the Westminster pit, at which "fifty personages of rank" were among the spectators, and whereas also his grace, the king's rat catcher, entered the arena with a cage containing ninety rats that a dog named Billy killed seriatim in seven minutes and thirty seconds.

Another article recorded that Mr. Wombwell, the proprietor of a lion named Nero, had built a den, ten feet high and fifty-seven feet in circumference, in which a contest a outrance between his pet and six dogs was to take place in June. Still another chronicled the melancholy fact that "John Smith, who was matched to eat a pair of men's shoes in fifteen minutes at the Half-Moon tap, Leadenhall market, has broke down in training, having been seized with indigestion."

Spot That Made History

The bridge over the River Adda at Lodi, Italy, is famous as the scene of a terrible contest between the French under Bonaparte and the Austrians under Beaulieu, May 10, 1796. The Austrians were strongly entrenched on the opposite bank of the Adda and their formidable artillery swept the bridge, but Bonaparte, charging at the head of his grenadiers, bayoneted the cannoniers at their guns and drove the defeated Austrians into the mountains of the Tyrol. As a result of this victory, Milan capitulated to Bonaparte a few days later. This battle is frequently spoken of as the "Terrible Passage of the Bridge of Lodi." It was Bonaparte's first important victory over the Austrians, and as he afterward declared, kindled the first spark of his ambition.—Kansas City Star.

The Fly View

An art critic, speaking of the virtues of this painting and the faults of that one, finally came to a picture in the gallery and said: "Now, you see in this picture the artist has not learned his trade—it lacks technique and understanding. His trees seem to have no form; they do not stand up; the grass has no roots. His clouds look like bits of paper stuck on the canvas. And here you see he has resorted to a trick to catch the public eye and has attempted to paint a fly. Now, I would not object to the fly, had he been able to draw better and make it look like a fly. This fly looks like a lump of mud and has not the character of a fly."

At this point the fly, having tired of the critic's rambling, took wing and flew away.

Nature of Pinchbeck

This is the name of an alloy of copper and zinc and was so called from its inventor, a London watchmaker who died in 1732. Pinchbeck made cheap jewelry from this alloy which had the appearance and luster of gold, although the counterfeit could easily be detected by its weight being less than that of gold and its want of resonance. The most common pinchbeck consists of about 10 or 15 per cent of zinc and the remainder copper—although tin is sometimes also added. The word "pinchbeck" is frequently applied to anything which is counterfeit or spurious. For instance, Anthony Trollope says: "Where in these pinchbeck days can we hope to find the old agricultural virtue in all its purity."—Exchange.

There Were Others

The young man hesitatingly entered her father's presence. With a preliminary clearing of the throat and a nervous twitch of his fingers, he said: "I have come to ask you if I may marry your daughter, Gertrude." "You may," said the father, promptly, as he passed the cigars. "And now that you're in the family, may I take you into my confidence?" "Why—er—" exclaimed the happy man.

"Well, my boy," said his future father-in-law, "I just want to say that as you pass around among your friends I wish you'd get some of them excited about Margaret, Dorothy, Bella and Nancy. And put a couple of cigars in your pocket."

Great Artist Reached
Helping Hand to Many

When a man becomes so eminent that he is in a class quite by himself legend springs up all around him and everything that he says is quoted and handed about. Edwin H. Blasfield writes in the North American Review. It is noteworthy indeed that among all the stories not one has ever been to John Singer Sargent's disadvantage. Modest he was and generous to his fellows, delicately considerate and magnanimous.

When Carroll Beckwith, one of the most intimate friends of his youth, died, his widow told me that John, as she always called Sargent, petioned for her many of Carroll's studies to put them in more finished and saleable condition, and when Abbey's hand was arrested in the midst of his decorative work for the Pennsylvania capitol at Harrisburg Sargent hurriedly made a long journey to superintend the completion of some of the panels, superintending, not bene, with a careful avoidance of personally touching a brush to the canvas. Wise he was, too, as to theory, and valiant as to principle; in the days of reactionaries he was a progressive, and when the race for notoriety at any price began he was a conservative. In one of his letters to me he declares that, as for himself, as he grows old he is "becoming rather proud of being called pomper."

Must Risk Life to Look From Mountain

Do you know that the weather is manufactured on a huge rock on Look-out mountain, Chattanooga, Tenn., and not at Medicine Hat or Washington as we have always supposed? The weather rock is a giant slab of peculiar shape projecting from the mountain top far over the green valley 2,900 feet below. It is necessary to crawl out on hands and knees to look over the edge, but the view is well worth the peril. Farms, villages, white highways, wooded hills and winding rivers are so far below the adventurous spectator that the country looks like a flat map done in emerald and silver, much as it does from an airplane. It takes from nerves and a clear and steady brain to peer over the dizzy verge, even lying flat on one's stomach—a simple slip means certain death, as there is not so much as a blade of grass to hold on by, only the smooth gray rock and loose pebbles, which roll at a touch and give one the sickening sensation of sliding toward the edge.

Stranger Guessed Well

A captious traveler in northern Arkansas stopped by a fence to criticize a near cornfield, which met his disapproval. "Mighty small corn you have there!" he shouted to the man who was "superintending the growth" from a shady corner.

"Yes," said the Arkansan, "Planted the small kind."

"Looks mighty yellow to me for this time of year."

"Yes, Planted the yellow kind."

"Well," said the traveler, severely, "I can't understand your method of farming. You won't get over half a crop there."

"No," said the Arkansan, cheerfully. "You are shore a good guesser, stranger. Half a crop exactly, that's mine. I planted this on shares."—Kansas City Star.

Immediately the church was plunged in total darkness, due to a failure in the supply.

"Brethren," said the minister, with scarcely a moment's pause, "In view of the sudden and startling fulfillment of this prophecy, we will spend a few minutes in silent prayer for the gas company."

Plain Gold Ring

The wedding ring of plain gold, which is a survival of Saxon times, has outlived several attempts at change of fashion.

For instance, at the marriage of Queen Mary of England to Philip of Spain the English statesmen debated the question of the ring and wished to have it jeweled, but Mary herself intervened by declaring that she would not have it set with gems, for she chose to be wedded with a plain hoop of gold like other maidens.—Detroit Free Press.

"Well, you remember it was a strange gate post," responded Blanche gravely.

Like Henry Clay, he was three times a candidate for the presidency and as often defeated. Though failing to achieve the highest honors in the nation, he exerted his influence in favor of Wilson and brought about his nomination and the defeat of Champ Clark. His "cross of gold" speech, delivered at the Chicago coliseum and which brought about his first nomination for the presidency, has been quoted oftener than any other of his words.

Always sincere, democratic in his tastes, he won the admiration of millions of his fellowmen. True, his espousal of free silver came to naught. So did his anti-imperialism. He believed in peace and set about, while secretary of state in Wilson's cabinet, to negotiate 30 peace treaties. There is a perversity in human nature, individual or national, for in spite of such safeguards the world war burst out like a huge holocaust just a year later.

He espoused the cause of prohibition. He not only preached it, but faithfully practiced it. Grape juice was served whenever the then Secretary of State and Mrs. Bryan entertained the diplomatic corps.

His was a great moral influence. He sought to be the friend, counsellor of the common man. His last stand was made at the Scopes trial where he enunciated his faith in God.

He was always an avowed opponent of the Darwin theory of evolution. He best enunciated his stand when in 1923 he addressed the legislature of West Virginia:

"School teachers paid by taxation should not be permitted to teach under the guise of science or philosophy anything that undermines faith in God, impairs belief in the Bible or discredits the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. Evolutionists rob the Saviour of the glory of the virgin birth, the majesty of His deity and the triumph of His resurrection. They weaken faith in the Bible by discarding the miracles and the supernatural and by eliminating from the Bible all that conflicts with their theories. They render the book a scrap of paper."

Strong in influence even after death, the public awaits the printing of his speech which he was not allowed to make at the Scopes trial.

As with all great men, years must elapse before the world will give him that place of honor which his various activities have entitled him to receive.

WEEK-END RAIL EXCURSIONS

THE DISPATCH notes that southern Minnesota is being favored with cheap week-end rail excursions to Chicago and other points. A rate of $7 is being made from St. Paul to Chicago and return. The St. Paul and Northwestern lines offer these rates. The Northern Pacific is conducting a weekly trip to Taylors Falls. The Great Western has declared special rates from all points on its lines into St. Paul and return. The Minneapolis & St. Louis has established week-end round-trip rates from more than a score of smaller cities and towns on its lines into the Twin Cities, with return trip Monday morning required.

You hear of no excursions to our lake region. Why can't the Northern Pacific run a week-end special from the Twin Cities to Brainerd? Taxis and buses here will quickly take the people to any one of the 700 lakes in our Brainerd Lake Region.

If the Chamber of Commerce, the resorts, local hotels and others interested joined in the appeal, probably the Northern Pacific would set in motion this concession for northern Minnesota. As matters now stand, southern Minnesota is getting all the excursion rates.

WE LIKE OUR LAKES

It is with keen approbation that THE DISPATCH notices the many picnics held by local people and local societies and lodges at our various lakes. It gives notice to the world that we ourselves are aware of the recreational advantages of our lakes.

The original discoverers of these beauty spots were the Indians. After them came various hunters and fishermen. The first organized movement from outside was that of the Nebraska colony which annually ran its special trains to Brainerd and then hired teams and wended their way to Big Pelican lake. The children of these early vacationers are now coming and automobiles make the trip in a short period as compared with the early form of locomotion.

If your chickens have any judgment at all, says the Clay County Herald, they always give the impression that your neighbor's garden is a better one than yours.

THE blueberry crop is reported as a scarce one.

Plants That Protect Coasts From the Sea

In the struggle to defend our coasts from sea encroachments, seaside authorities have no better allies than the hardy tamarisk and shrubby sea blite. These useful plants are as effective in protecting the lonely stretches of our shores as stout sea walls and far-flung groynes, says a writer in London Tit-Bits. Take, for example, Shoreham, on the Sussex coast. This town was seriously affected by the incoming tides until it was found that the loose shingle that fringes the sea could be bound into a resisting mass by the extensive planting of tamarisk, a hardy little plant whose only real enemy is severe frost.

On the Norfolk coast the same method is adopted, but there the shifting shingle is bound with shrubby sea blite, which grows waist high and covers large areas of the coast. The more this plant is ill-treated the stouter it flourishes. Occasionally a violent storm will result in the shrubs being completely embedded in fresh shingle thrown up by the waves. This, in reality, is an advantage, as the plant puts forth new shoots that bind the fresh stones, still further strengthening the land rampart.

"Sports" a Century Ago Not of Highest Order

Public entertainments in London a hundred or more years ago were more of a sporting than of a dramatic or musical type. In the Observer of a date of 1825 appeared a full report of a dog fight, at the Westminster pit, at which "fifty personages of rank" were among the spectators, and whereat also his grace, the king's rat catcher, entered the arena with a cage containing ninety rats that a dog named Billy killed seriatim in seven minutes and thirty seconds.

Another article recorded that Mr. Wombwell, the proprietor of a lion named Nero, had built a den, ten feet high and fifty-seven feet in circumference, in which a contest a outrance between his pet and six dogs was to take place in June. Still another chronicled the melancholy fact that "John Smith, who was matched to eat a pair of men's shoes in fifteen minutes at the Half-Moon tap, Leadenhall market, has broken down in training, having been seized with indigestion."

Spot That Made History

The bridge over the River Adda at Lodi, Italy, is famous as the scene of a terrible contest between the French under Bonaparte and the Austrians under Beaulieu, May 10, 1796. The Austrians were strongly entrenched on the opposite bank of the Adda and their formidable artillery swept the bridge, but Bonaparte, charging at the head of his grenadiers, bayoneted the cannoniers at their guns and drove the defeated Austrians into the mountains of the Tyrol. As a result of this victory, Milan capitulated to Bonaparte a few days later. This battle is frequently spoken of as the "Terrible Passage of the Bridge of Lodi." It was Bonaparte's first important victory over the Austrians, and, as he afterward declared, kindled the first spark of his ambition.—Kansas City Star.

The Fly flew

An art critic, speaking of the virtues of this painting and the faults of that one, finally came to a picture in the gallery and said: "Now, you see in this picture the artist has not learned his trade—it lacks technique and understanding. His trees seem to have no form; they do not stand up; the grass has no roots. His clouds look like bits of paper stuck on the canvas. And here you see he has resorted to a trick to catch the public eye and has attempted to paint a fly. Now, I would not object to the fly, had he been able to draw better and make it look like a fly. This fly looks like a lump of mud and has not the character of a fly."

At this point the fly, having tired of the critic's rambling, took wing and flew away.

Nature of Pinchbeck

This is the name of an alloy of copper and zinc and was so called from its inventor, a London watchmaker who died in 1732. Pinchbeck made cheap jewelry from this alloy which had the appearance and luster of gold, although the counterfeit could easily be detected by its weight being less than that of gold and its want of resonance. The most common pinchbeck consists of about 10 or 15 per cent of zinc and the remainder copper—although tin is sometimes also added. The word "pinchbeck" is frequently applied to anything which is counterfeit or spurious. For instance, Anthony Trollope says: "Where in these pinch beck days can we hope to find the old agricultural virtue in all its purity."—Exchange.

There Were Others

The young man hesitatingly entered her father's presence. With a preliminary clearing of the throat and a nervous twitch of his fingers, he said: "I have come to ask you if I may marry your daughter, Gertrude." "You may," said the father, promptly, as he passed the cigars. "And now that you're in the family, may I take you into my confidence?" "Why—er—" exclaimed the happy man.

"Well, my boy," said his future father-in-law, "I just want to say that as you pass around among your friends I wish you'd get some of them excited about Margaret, Dorothy, Bella and Nancy. And put a couple of cigars in your pocket."

Great Artist Reached Helping Hand to Many

When a man becomes so eminent that he is in a class quite by himself legend springs up all around him and everything that he says is quoted and handed about. Edwin H. Blasfield writes in the North American Review. It is noteworthy indeed that among all the stories not one has ever been told of John Singer Sargent's disadvantage. Modest he was and generous to his fellows, delicately considerate and magnanimous.

When Carroll Beckwith, one of the most intimate friends of his youth, died, his widow told me that John, as she always called Sargent, retouched for her many of Carroll's studies to put them in more finished and saleable condition, and when Abbey's hand was arrested in the midst of his decorative work for the Pennsylvania capitol at Harrisburg Sargent hurriedly made a long journey to superintend the completion of some of the panels, superintending, not bene, with a careful avoidance of personally touching a brush to the canvas. Wise he was, too, as to theory, and valiant as to principle; in the days of reactionaries he was a progressive, and when the race for notoriety at any price began he was a conservative. In one of his letters to me he declares that, as for himself, as he grows old he is "becoming rather proud of being called pomper."

Must Risk Life to Look From Mountain

Do you know that the weather is manufactured on a huge rock on Look-out mountain, Chattanooga, Tenn., and not at Medicine Hat or Washington as we have always supposed? The weather rock is a giant slab of peculiar shape projecting from the mountain top far over the green valley 2,900 feet below. It is necessary to crawl out on hands and knees to look over the edge, but the view is well worth the peril. Farms, villages, white highways, wooded hills and winding rivers are so far below the adventurous spectator that the country looks like a flat map done in emerald and silver, much as it does from an airplane. It takes iron nerves and a clear and steady brain to peer over the dizzy verge, even lying flat on one's stomach—a simple slip means certain death, as there is not so much as a blade of grass to hold on by, only the smooth gray rock and loose pebbles, which roll at a touch and give one the sickening sensation of sliding toward the edge.

Stranger Guessed Well

A captious traveler in northern Arkansas stopped by a fence to criticize a near cornfield, which met his disapproval. "Mighty small corn you have there!" he shouted to the man who was "superintending the growth" from a shady corner. "Yes," said the Arkansan. "Planted the small kind." "Looks mighty yellow to me for this time of year." "Yes, Planted the yellow kind." "Well," said the traveler, severely, "I can't understand your method of farming. You won't get over half a crop there." "No," said the Arkansan, cheerfully. "You are shore a good guesser, stranger. Half a crop exactly, that's mine. I planted this on shares."—Kansas City Star.

Plain Gold Ring

The wedding ring of plain gold, which is a survival of Saxon times, has outlived several attempts at change of fashion.

For instance, at the marriage of Queen Mary of England to Philip of Spain the English statesmen debated the question of the ring and wished to have it jeweled, but Mary herself intervened by declaring that she would not have it set with gems, for she chose to be wedded with a plain hoop of gold like other maidens.—Detroit Free Press.

"Well, you remember it was a strange gate post," responded Bluebelle gravely.

REDDA HOYT TALKS ABOUT THINGS THAT INTEREST THE BUSY WOMEN OF 1925

BOB

By REDDA HOYT
(Fashion Editor of the United Press)
(Written for the United Press)

New York, July 27.—"Bobbed hair is here to stay" according to William Kremer, whose establishment turns out as many as two hundred permanently waved heads per day.

"When only young women bobbed their hair we could not be sure that short locks would be a permanent style, said Mr. Kremer. "But today many of the women we bob are matrons with refinement and position to uphold. The great majority of young women have been bobbed for several years and recently older women are falling for the spell of the shears.

"Ever so often there is a rumor that bobbed hair is going out of style. We have not noticed any decline in bobbing. Occasionally a young Miss in her teens decides to let her hair grow long but this is because she has never known long hair and she wants to try something different. She usually lets it grow a few months and returns to the bob again.

Will Return to Bob

"Women may let their hair grow long but I believe they will always return to short locks. Short hair is youthful, becoming and sanitary. One with short hair runs no risk of scalp diseases for the air has an opportunity to get to the scalp and keep it in healthy condition.

"Many women ask whether they will become bald if they continue to wear short hair. This is sheer rot. Hair invariably grows thicker when constantly trimmed. Tight hats which smother the hair-roots are responsible for making the hair fall out and women should beware of over-snug felt hats which are in vogue at present.

When asked whether permanent waving establishments were not biased on the short hair question, Mr. Kremer replied, "It makes very little difference to us whether women wear short or long hair. Permanent waving is so successful that whether the hair is long or short women will demand it.

Interesting Novelties

Received From Paris

Amusing novelties in garters received from Paris. The touch of something bizarre, a cubist motif of some sort, a rakish wisp of feather drawn through a little clasp are among the latest styles seen in touching up the round garter of gathered ribbon. The very last word is a little doll's head held in a ribbon rosette. It is painted with a coquettish expression, hat and all.

Another illustration of the same idea is the head of a black cat. Still another, that of a small rabbit. Other ornaments are painted in equally eccentric styles.

A new use for beads is found in some of the latest models from Paris. They are evening gowns of soft fabrics on which beads in long strands are introduced as trimming. Sometimes these match the motifs, or over-pattern, in which the dress is embroidered, but in the newest style bands of the beads, crystal, painted or pearl, form a finish for the neck and hem and depend from the arms or shoulders in graceful loops and lines.

The new millinery is a comprehensive topic in itself, but occasional hats are of the type that present examples of needlework. Petit point is much used on the little crepe de chine and satin hats, and a late fancy is for cut-out figures, flowers and leaves applied on straw or fabric hats.

Jumper Grows Longer

and May Reach Knees

And still they come, these little three-piece frocks, each more delightful than the one before and each revealing some new and tricky detail that lends it distinction and unmistakable cachet.

In the later versions of this most popular mode the jumper is noticeably longer, in some instances reaching well to the knees. Below this the skirt is plaited or cut to flare in a circular fashion. Frequently the skirt is in contrast to the upper part and models which feature a jumper of plain flat crepe and a skirt of printed crepe de chine are unusually smart and attractive.

For midsummer country wear there are fascinating frocks made of wash silk in plaided or striped designs. In these the long jumper shows the stripes running crosswise, while on the skirt they are up and down. Others reveal a vertical arrangement of stripes on both jumper and skirts.

Even Kings Fix Prices

Price fixing on the part of governments was not a new idea when it was used in the World-war time of economic stress and since during the reconstruction period. King Henry III of England was one of the early rulers to use the right. He caused an ordinance to be passed prohibiting bow makers from selling their best bows at more than 3 shillings 4 pence each.

Marshmallow Dessert.—Toast a few marshmallows that have been cut into quarters, serve them with chopped nuts and flavored whipped cream.

Jellied Prunes.—Wash and soak one-half pound of prunes in two cupsful of cold water, then cook in the same water until soft. Remove the prune stones and cut into quarters; to the prune water add enough boiling water to make two cupsful, soak half a box of gelatin in half a cupful of cold water and stir over the heat until dissolved, then add one cupful of sugar, one-quarter of a cupful of lemon juice; turn into a mold and stir a few times to prevent the prunes from sinking. Serve with sugar and cream.

Figs With Lemon Sauce.—Soak figs several hours in cold water, then put them into an agate pan, add water enough to just cover them and cook until plump; add one-fourth of a cupful of lemon juice to the water, when nearly tender, drain the figs and serve in a glass dish, with the juice slightly thickened with cornstarch and thoroughly cooked, poured around it. Chill and serve with whipped cream flavored with grated lemon rind.

Rice With Bananas.—Season cold boiled rice with melted butter, the grated rind of a lemon, and sweeten to taste with sugar. Add the yolks of two eggs well beaten, cook until thick, then pack into a border mold and keep warm ten minutes. Turn out carefully on a plate, fill the center with sliced sweetened bananas. Pour over the pudding a sirup flavored with lemon, orange, or any fruit juice.

Bacon and Egg Sandwiches.—Chop as many hard-cooked eggs as will be needed, adding a tablespoonful of mayonnaise for each egg. Spread on buttered bread and top with a thin slice of cooked bacon. Cover with another slice of bread and wrap in paraffin paper.

Be Careful, Madam

Palmolive complexions
do not come from other sorts of "olive oil" soaps

We have led millions of women to expect fine complexions from olive and palm oils, as used in Palmolive Soap.

They have gained added beauty and fresh, clear skins. But some credit those results to olive and palm oils alone. And any "olive and palm" soap may claim to be a soap like Palmolive.

They are mistaken. Olive and palm oils have been used for ages. Cleopatra used them—Roman beauties used them. Castile soap—the real castile—attained its fame on olive oil alone.

But olive and palm oils in those forms never brought great results. Palmolive Soap has brought new beauty to millions. It has thus become the leading toilet soap of the world.

It is made in five countries to supply the world demand. And one is France—the home of fine cosmetics.

Just because Palmolive, based on 60 years of soap study, gives to these oils a new effect on the skin.

It has multiplied beautiful complexions. Now many times as many women keep their youth and charm.

There are soaps at 25 cents and over, which approach Palmolive in results. We know of two. But Palmolive sells at 10 cents—no more than ordinary soaps. Enormous production brings you this modest cost.

Now countless "olive and palm" soaps are offered for like purpose. Some have artificial colors, some are over-fatted. They will cleanse, if you want mere cleansers. But don't expect such soaps to bring Palmolive results to the skin. That is impossible.

Note the unnatural "too green" color of Palmolive imitators. What does that suggest? Men don't paint nature to improve it.

Olive and palm oils—nothing else—give Palmolive its delicate, natural color. Olive and palm oils—no other fats whatsoever—are used in Palmolive.

No "super-fattening," no "super-anything"—the only secret to Palmolive is its blending. And that is judged one of the world's priceless beauty secrets.

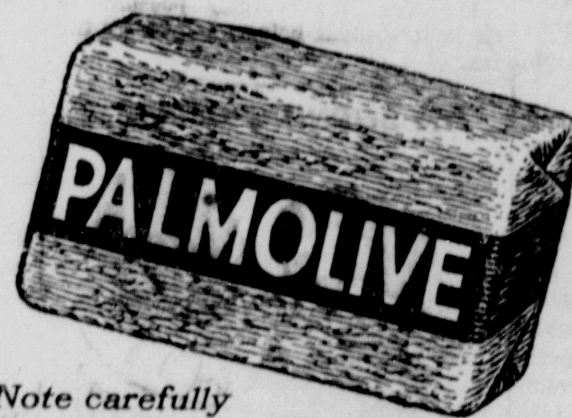

Wash, launder, cleanse with any soap you wish—but when beauty is at stake, take care. Use Palmolive, a soap you know is safe to use. Palmolive is nature's formula to "Keep That Schoolgirl Complexion."

Soap from Trees

The only oils in Palmolive Soap are the soothing beauty oils from the olive tree, the African palm and the coconut palm—and no other fats whatsoever.

That is why Palmolive Soap is the natural color that it is—for palm and olive oils, nothing else, give Palmolive its green color!

The only secret to Palmolive is its exclusive blend—and that is one of the world's priceless beauty secrets.

Note carefully
the name and wrapper.
Palmolive is never sold unwrapped.

Be Careful, Madam Palmolive complexions do not come from other sorts of "olive oil" soaps

We have led millions of women to expect fine complexions from olive and palm oils, as used in Palmolive Soap.

They have gained added beauty and fresh, clear skins. But some credit those results to olive and palm oils alone. And any "olive and palm" soap may claim to be a soap like Palmolive.

They are mistaken. Olive and palm oils have been used for ages. Cleopatra used them—Roman beauties used them. Castile soap—the real castile—attained its fame on olive oil alone.

But olive and palm oils in those forms never brought great results. Palmolive Soap has brought new beauty to millions. It has thus become the leading toilet soap of the world.

It is made in five countries to supply the world demand. And one is France—the home of fine cosmetics.

Just because Palmolive, based on 60 years of soap study, gives to these oils a new effect on the skin.

It has multiplied beautiful complexions. Now many times as many women keep their youth and charm.

There are soaps at 25 cents and over, which approach Palmolive in results. We know of two. But Palmolive sells at 10 cents—no more than ordinary soaps. Enormous production brings you this modest cost.

Now countless "olive and palm" soaps are offered for like purpose. Some have artificial colors, some are over-fatted. They will cleanse, if you want mere cleansers. But don't expect such soaps to bring Palmolive results to the skin. That is impossible.

Note the unnatural "too green" color of Palmolive imitators. What does that suggest? Men don't paint nature to improve it.

Olive and palm oils—nothing else—give Palmolive its delicate, natural color. Olive and palm oils—no other fats whatsoever—are used in Palmolive.

No "super-fattening," no "super-anything"—the only secret to Palmolive is its blending. And that is judged one of the world's priceless beauty secrets.

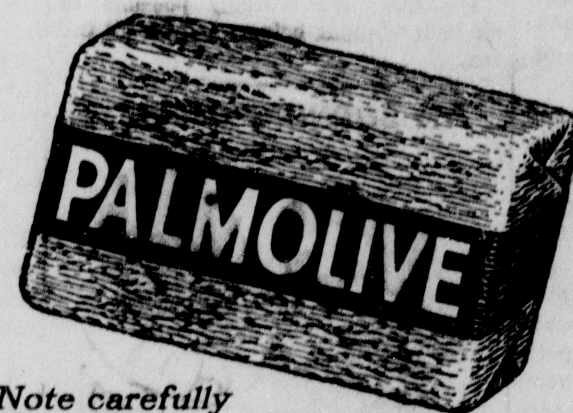

Wash, launder, cleanse with any soap you wish—but when beauty is at stake, take care. Use Palmolive, a soap you know is safe to use. Palmolive is nature's formula to "Keep That Schoolgirl Complexion."

Soap from Trees

The only oils in Palmolive Soap are the soothing beauty oils from the olive tree, the African palm and the coconut palm—and no other fats whatsoever.

That is why Palmolive Soap is the natural color that it is—for palm and olive oils, nothing else, give Palmolive its green color!

The only secret to Palmolive is its exclusive blend—and that is one of the world's priceless beauty secrets.

Note carefully
the name and wrapper.
Palmolive is never sold unwrapped.

"Two and Two Makes Four"

By A. W. PEACH

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

BROOKES shoved back the legal papers on his desk and dreamed a bit, a dream in which a slim, dark-haired girl came to him in her quick, impulsive way and looked up at him with her dark, trusting eyes.

"It almost seems a dream that next week I am to marry Helen. I'm going to wake up and find it a dream—pshaw! I'm getting woozy, losing my sand. Anyway, the house out on Wendon road is real, and my job is real. Guess I'll get at it!" he mused.

Before he did, however, he turned to the phone and called up the friend at whose house Helen had told him she was to spend the afternoon, if possible.

Gertrude's quiet voice came over the phone with a bit of hesitancy playing in it. "Yes, she was here, Wilton, but—but—I think I ought to be honest with you. She has gone out to Victor Stanley's. She seemed pretty sober, and I—well, you know how much they thought of each other until you came. I want to tell you, because I feel she ought to be yours rather than his. Good-by."

Wilton seemed to hear a slow crashing as of dreams ready to crumble, and the sunshine went out of his world as if sunshine were unknown there.

He began to put two and two together, and he knew that two and two in mathematics makes four. She had loved Stanley, although he was fifteen years older than she, a successful lawyer, distinguished in appearance, a member of a strong firm whose head had just died and to which position he would go.

"It looks like a clear case. She's wavering, and has slipped away to see him again and make sure. What chance have I—a cub of a lawyer just breaking in against him?" Wilton mused grimly.

When he left her at her apartment, she gave him a warm and fragrant good-night kiss in the old impulsive way, but he knew in his very heart as he turned away through the darkness that he and she had come to the troublesome spot in all lives where the road divides.

The next day, at the office, he reached his final decision. He would accept the offer the importing firm had made him to send him to South America to look after some tangled contracts, but first he would send her a note that would release her.

As he sealed it, the phone rang. Over it came Stanley's deep, resonant voice. "Will you step over to my office for a few minutes?"

Wilton started to refuse, then his sense of courtesy intervened, and he assented.

"Probably to tell me to stand aside like a man," Wilton suggested to himself.

When he opened the door into Stanley's private office, the first blow came. He saw Helen there radiant in her simple, yet distinctive dark dress. The sheer joy in her eyes made his heart ache. He clutched the letters in his pocket, and they gave him a little comfort.

The older man turned, a faint smile on his grave, serious face. "Brookes, Helen and I have been plotting a bit. She knows your hopes and ambitions better than I, and I know your ability as a lawyer; so I called her in for advice; and putting two and two together, I want to offer you a junior partnership in my firm!"

Wilton's breathing seemed to cease, and the room spun.

"I hope you won't refuse," Stanley said. "We all like you—even I do, although you have taken Helen from me." He smiled. "And I knew you would—the moment I saw you two together."

Wilton began to crush the letters in his pocket, and the door that had closed on Arcady began to swing open.

"I'm a bit stunned—it's a surprise—but I accept, of course!" Stanley gripped his hand. Beyond Stanley Helen had risen, a mist in her eyes. The older man sensed the situation.

"This will make some change in your plans, and as I am due for a conference, I'll leave you the office. Come over, Wilton, as soon as you get your affairs in shape."

With the closing of the door, Helen came to him, putting her arms around his neck. "Oh, sweetheart, isn't that just a fine wedding present! Why—what makes you look so strange?"

The words burst out. "Oh, Helen, I—!" and then he told her of his troubled hours. As he spoke her eyes grew softer, and when he finished she said gently:

"I understand, but there was never a shadow of doubt in my heart. The other thing that made me sober? Well, you see I have been thinking of mother—how she would have helped me with my—my trousseau and how she would enjoy it—and I so wanted someone who loves nice things to help me. So I went to Gertrude, and then I thought of Victor's sister—who has sort of mothered me. Then, too, Victor is planning with the rest of the men to give you a great time, and we had to plan that. You see, dear?"

He told her that he saw—in a way without words; and as he held her close and knew that she was wholly and forever his and joyed in the thought, a little whisper went through some part of his mind saying, "Two and two makes four in arithmetic, but with human hearts—it's never safe to figure just what it makes!"

She was very much in love with the Brainerd lake region, and because of this, it has been decided to make interment just as near the scenes which she enjoyed as possible.

The funeral will be held at Pequot this Monday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, and interment made in the Pequot cemetery. The deceased is survived by her husband and a stepdaughter. Beside her family she will be mourned by a large circle of friends both in Chicago and in the local lake district.

INDUSTRY SHOWS PROGRESS

Better Cars Being Built Than Ever Before—Research Work Continues

Progress obtained by work of the hardest kind has brought the automotive industry within a quarter of a century from virtually nothing to the commanding place in the industrial life of our country. Now that first place has been attained, there should be no tendency to sit back satisfied. This attitude must not be assumed if the industry is to retain its leading position.

The commercial history of this country is replete with instances of manufacturers who felt that they had arrived and could rest content only later to be rudely awakened by some young, vigorous rival who recognized the principle that to succeed you must progress. Every year for two decades the leading automobile manufacturers have brought out what they honestly believed was the best car in its price class, and felt that it could not be excelled. Yet within twelve months their own engineers have proved that the product could be improved. And so it has gone on, each year seeing better automobiles and so it will continue as long as it is possible to make improvements.

Years ago the Buick Motor Company took for its slogan, "When Better Automobiles are Built, Buick will build Them." This was not selected as a vainglorious boast, but was predicated on the well defined policy that Buick intends bettering its product by the adoption of such improvements as continuous experience may develop.

Maybe the perfect automobile is yet to be built. No one can say how close or how far we are from that coveted result. Extensive research will reveal this, and this fact is recognized by the more progressive manufacturers who are constantly striving to make a better car.

This has been the policy of the Buick Motor Company and it will continue as such. The large engineering and research staffs of the Buick are constantly working to create Buicks, and as they progress better Buicks will be built.

It is a good thing for the industry as a whole that there is a tendency to discard the habit of making changes merely for the sake of having a change. But this extended to the curtailment of real improvements from year to year would mean but one thing ultimately—that the automotive industry would start slipping backward, for it is a truism that nothing stands still, we must continue to go forward or go backward.

SUMMER PROGRAM OF RED CROSS

Wednesday and Thursday This Week Are to be Important Days

LIFE SAVING DEMONSTRATION

Alfred S. Moreau, Instructor, to Give Practical Instruction in City

Wednesday and Thursday of this week are to be important days in the summer program of the local chapter of the American Red Cross, inasmuch as Alfred S. Moreau, life saving instructor and demonstrator for the national association, will be in the city for the purpose of giving practical instruction in life saving methods to everyone interested.

Mr. Moreau has made this his life's study, and for the past ten years has been associated with the Red Cross in the capacity of life saving expert. He is now on a tour of the United States for his association, putting on demonstrations in only the larger cities, and the local chapter feels very fortunate in securing him for two days for demonstrations in Brainerd.

It is hoped that every local citizen will take full advantage of this excellent opportunity to learn first hand from one of the nation's foremost authorities on the subject, the most modern and approved methods of life saving, resuscitation, etc. It is especially apropos that these demonstrations be given in the very heart of the lake country, where accidents while boating or bathing are imminent.

Realizing the dangers of the summer lake season, the Brainerd Chapter prevailed upon Mr. Moreau to give two days of his time to this city. He will give tests to the Boy Scouts and junior boys on Wednesday afternoon, July 29th, and to the Girl Scouts and junior girls on Thursday afternoon, July 30th. It is hoped that every boy and girl will take advantage of this opportunity and be present at the tests.

The public instructions and demonstrations will be held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 7 o'clock, and are open to everyone. It is the hope of the Brainerd chapter as well as the instructor's wish that as many as possible avail themselves of the opportunity and attend both evenings. The evening sessions will begin promptly at 7 o'clock. The afternoon sessions start at 2 o'clock and last until 5 in the afternoon.

On Wednesday evening the Brainerd Municipal band has been promised for music during the demonstrations, and on Thursday evening the Brainerd Boys band will entertain.

Tourists and lake resorters are given a special invitation to be present at these demonstrations. They will find the instructions of special interest and decidedly practical.

WILLYS-OVERLAND DATA

Production Records For June Shattered, Last Year's Mark Eclipsed

Coupled with reports at the factory of greatly increased dealer sales throughout the country comes the announcement from Willys-Overland officials that production records of June were shattered in the sixth month's production in 1925.

Car production of Willys-Overland during June soared considerably higher than the figures for the corresponding months of 1924, according to reports emanating from the factory. Officials indicate that never before has Willys-Overland experienced a healthier sales activity than was noted during the month of June.

Despite the fact that two holidays occurred together in the first week of July, officials say that the turnover of cars in dealers sales continued at the unusually heavy rate noted during the preceding month and optimism runs high at the Willys-Overland factory for the biggest summer months' business ever done, which has necessitated the addition of considerably more employees to the force at the Willys-Overland factory.

WON'T RAISE PRICE FOR 'BIG THREE' GAMES

By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor)

New York, July 27.—Athletic officials of the "Big Three," who have been diligent for years in steering athletics away from the dangers of commercialism have made a popular move in deciding not to increase the price of admission to the big football games.

Prices for the Yale-Harvard-Princeton games will remain at three dollars, although it is quite certain that choice tickets for the big games would draw from $15 to $50 on the open market. The Yale officials also decided to increase the prices for the Yale-Army game, one of the most attractive games of the season.

In discussing the decision of the athletic officials, H. F. Woodcock, general manager of the Yale Athletic Association, said:

"The athletic boards at Yale, Harvard and Princeton are confronted annually with the great problem of providing adequate facilities for an ever-growing number of young men who desire to take part in some form of athletics, and this problem is becoming a more difficult one to meet every year. At Yale, and I am sure at Harvard and Princeton, too, nearly all the students went to do something for their physical welfare, and in freshman year their athletic exercise of some sort is compulsory.

"With the steady increase in the number of students at each university, additional equipment and facilities must be provided. Football, probably will be called upon, therefore, to a greater extent than ever to do what it has been doing in the past—provide funds for the operation of the other branches of athletics, the maintenance of the property and plant and for new construction."

Jimmy Goodrich, survivor of the elimination tournament by the New York Boxing Commission, is recognized by the promoters in New York as the world's lightweight champion, succeeding Benny Leonard, who retired and left the title vacant.

It is doubtful how the boxing public in New York and other states will rank him and it is quite certain that he will not be accepted as the world's champion by European critics.

He is at least the American champion, and he has a fair claim to the world's title because France and England were invited to nominate entries for the eliminations and their claims, if any, were lost by default when they failed to accept the invitation of the New York commission.

The new champion, however, has little cause to worry for at least six months. As long as he is recognized by the promoters in New York, he can demand a champion's purse, and all the good purses are in New York. Some of the commissions in this country, who have no particular regard, may scoff at him just because he is the New York commission's champion, but they will find it hard to answer the question—if he is not the champion, who is the champion?

He will not be annoyed for six months because the rules provide that it is necessary for a champion to defend his title only once in New York.

BIG GAME IN U. S. PARKS INCREASE

AMERICAN ANIMALS AREN'T FOLLOWING WAY OF THE ANTELOPE

Washington, July 27.—Uncle Sam's guests, who lived in America for millions of years before he arrived—the wild big game animals in the 159 national forests—are rapidly increasing in number. But their food and beds aren't costing him much, so he should worry.

The nimrods who hunt in territory near the national reserves, who depend upon the multiplications of animals in the parks for their supply of sport and venison and bear-meat, can take cheer from the word that the deer, the bear, and the elk and the moose are not following the antelope and the great auk into oblivion and history.

The protected animals number more than 687,000, the forest service of the U. S. department of agriculture reports on the basis of a "census" taken last year. This figure represents an increase of 44,000 head in addition to 44,300 bears which were not included in the 1923 figure.

Mostly Deer
Deer represent more than two-thirds of the animals, the number increasing from 511,200 in 1923 to 550,500 in 1924. The increase was spread over the national parks in all parts of the country except those in California.

California, however, still is the leading deer state. After it come Oregon, Montana, Idaho and Arizona. Alaska has about 50,000 deer. Those in Arizona are principally in the Kaibab forest, where authorities are attempting to sell or give them away, on account of lack of grazing land to keep them alive.

Only a few grizzly bears were found, these being in Montana, but more than 5,500 were found in Alaska. The remaining 38,700 were of the black and brown varieties, and were generally scattered over the west.

Elk increased in all western forests, 52,600 being found. Federal authorities are faced with the problem of keeping down the head of elk in the Teton National forest, adjoining Yellowstone National park, because of rapid increases without corresponding increases in forage.

Antelopes Passing
The best antelope, or pronghorn, once so numerous on the plains, is nearly extinct. The 1924 count showed only about 5,000, most of them in Arizona and Idaho. In addition, there is a large herd in northwestern Nevada and southeastern Oregon, grazing on public lands outside of the national forest areas. An effort is being made to create a game refuge to save this herd from extermination.

Moose decreased in number, only 5,100 of these magnificent animals being found, as compared to 8,000 the year before.

The number of mountain sheep was placed at 12,400; that of mountain goats at 17,200; both slight increases.

Buffaloes have dropped out of the estimates, as these animals are found only in protected herds.

BRAINERD COUNTRY CLUB SENDS A VERY LARGE DELEGATION

SUNDAY AFTERNOON TOURNAMENT IS WELL ATTENDED

PLAY PERSISTS IN SPITE OF FREQUENT SHOWERS

Twenty men with their ladies, members of the Brainerd Country club, were royally entertained at a tournament by the Little Falls Town and Country club on Sunday afternoon, in one of the most enjoyable plays of this season. About 16 of the local players, with their families, left Brainerd at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, arriving in the down river city in time to eat their lunches, which they had taken with them, on the river bank.

Play started at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, but all players were chased off the course after about 7 minutes, by the rain storm. This soon blew over and play was resumed, continuing until after 6 o'clock when a second storm descended upon the course. By this time, however, nearly all entrants in the tournament had completed their 18 holes.

The Little Falls course has been greatly improved since last year, and presents many sporty features. This is especially true on the first four holes. The rain made a number of water hazards on Sunday, which called for some brilliant golf.

Sherman Levis, of Little Falls, known to Brainerd players as well as to his own club as "Our bookstore man" was the star of the day, breaking the course record with a par 36. At the close of the tournament the Brainerd aggregation was taken to the Elks cafe, where a large share of the dining room had been set off for the golfers, and enjoyed a very delightful supper as guests of the Little Falls Town and Country club. After supper the Elks bowling alleys were put at the disposal of the visitors. Some of the best golfers proved to be very poor bowlers, and vice versa.

Much credit is due Fred Miller, chairman of the tournament committee of the Little Falls club, and his assistants, for the excellent manner in which Sunday's event was handled.

and for the exceptionally fine treatment accorded the visitors from Brainerd. Every courtesy was extended to the members of the local club, Little Falls upholding her reputation for being royal entertainers.

Owing to the rain at 6 o'clock Sunday evening, which was a terrific downpour, some confusion was caused in collecting the scores, but these results will be available for Tuesday's Dispatch.

39—Standardizing the Swing.

It is fully as important for the golf beginner to learn what not to do as to learn just what it is necessary to do. Least of all should the beginner copy what really are the faults of the experts. The first thought of the beginner should be to learn the how and the why of each element of the golf stroke and never to make a change unless it is well considered and certain, after trial, to be an improvement.

A golfer who had passed the beginning stage and who had developed an unexpectedly good form was seen last year to be practicing a bobbing down of the head on the back swing and bobbing it up on the forward swing, simply because he had seen Jim Barnes do it. It took a good deal of discussion and demonstration to prove that Jim Barnes never had bobbed his head as the golfer thought he did. There is a slight duck and recovery of the position of the head in Jim's swing, but the golfer entirely overlooked the fact that Jim's head was back in the original position when he connected with the ball. It is a mannerism rather than a fault that a number of the experts have. They would be the first to advise against the use of the mannerism by anyone else. It would almost certainly be a fault in any golfer who attempted to copy it. Jim's lathy build may account for this mannerism, but no one who has seen him play will claim it prevents him from driving a long and accurate ball.

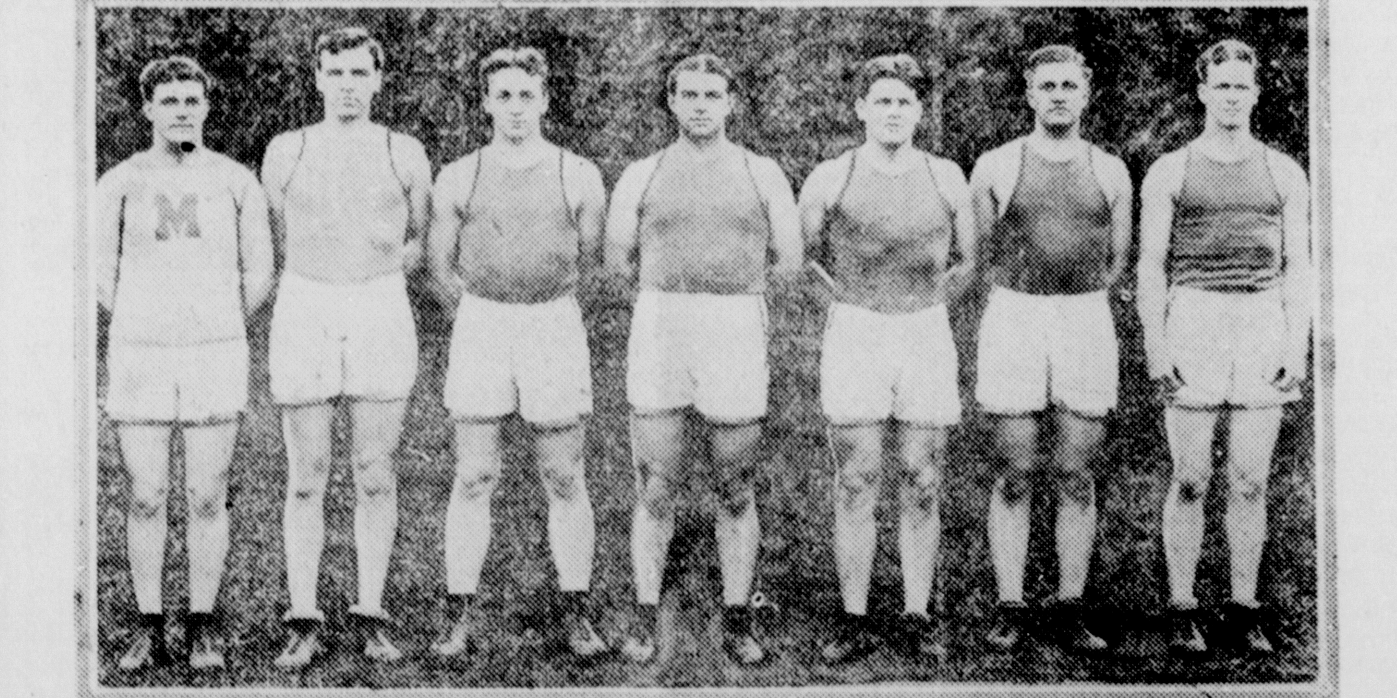

Any experienced golfer can identify a score or a hundred of his friends by their swings and at a distance where identification would be impossible by any other means. Perhaps every one of these golfers is a good player with an established swing. The main elements of the swing are the same in all. The mannerisms or individual peculiarities show the vast number of variations in a standard stroke. Yet all of them are right. The task of the beginner, then, should be to standardize his swing as quickly as possible. By the time he reaches the expert class he will have developed enough peculiarities so that he can be recognized at a distance by any of his friends.

The number of mountain sheep was placed at 12,400; that of mountain goats at 17,200; both slight increases.

Buffaloes have dropped out of the estimates, as these animals are found only in protected herds.

BRAINERD COUNTRY CLUB SENDS A VERY LARGE DELEGATION

SUNDAY AFTERNOON TOURNAMENT IS WELL ATTENDED

PLAY PERSISTS IN SPITE OF FREQUENT SHOWERS

Twenty men with their ladies, members of the Brainerd Country club, were royally entertained at a tournament by the Little Falls Town and Country club on Sunday afternoon, in one of the most enjoyable plays of this season. About 16 of the local players, with their families, left Brainerd at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, arriving in the down river city in time to eat their lunches, which they had taken with them, on the river bank.

Play started at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, but all players were chased off the course after about 7 minutes, by the rain storm. This soon blew over and play was resumed, continuing until after 6 o'clock when a second storm descended upon the course. By this time, however, nearly all entrants in the tournament had completed their 18 holes.

The Little Falls course has been greatly improved since last year, and presents many sporty features. This is especially true on the first four holes. The rain made a number of water hazards on Sunday, which called for some brilliant golf.

Sherman Lewis, of Little Falls, known to Brainerd players as well as to his own club as "Our bookstore man" was the star of the day, breaking the course record with a par 36.

At the close of the tournament the Brainerd aggregation was taken to the Elks cafe, where a large share of the dining room had been set off for the golfers, and enjoyed a very delightful supper as guests of the Little Falls Town and Country club. After supper the Elks bowling alleys were put at the disposal of the visitors. Some of the best golfers proved to be very poor bowlers, and vice versa.

Much credit is due Fred Miller, chairman of the tournament committee of the Little Falls club, and his assistants, for the excellent manner in which Sunday's event was handled.

and for the exceptionally fine treatment accorded the visitors from Brainerd. Every courtesy was extended to the members of the local club, Little Falls upholding her reputation for being royal entertainers.

Owing to the rain at 6 o'clock Sunday evening, which was a terrific downpour, some confusion was caused in collecting the scores, but these results will be available for Tuesday's Dispatch.

39—Standardizing the Swing.

It is fully as important for the golfer beginner to learn what not to do as to learn just what it is necessary to do. Least of all should the beginner copy what really are the faults of the experts. The first thought of the beginner should be to learn the how and the why of each element of the golf stroke and never to make a change unless it is well considered and certain, after trial, to be an improvement.

A golfer who had passed the beginning stage and who had developed an unexpectedly good form was seen last year to be practicing a bobbing down of the head on the back swing and bobbing it up on the forward swing, simply because he had seen Jim Barnes do it. It took a good deal of discussion and demonstration to prove that Jim Barnes never had bobbed his head as the golfer thought he did. There is a slight duck and recovery of the position of the head in Jim's swing, but the golfer entirely overlooked the fact that Jim's head was back in the original position when he connected with the ball. It is a mannerism rather than a fault that a number of the experts have. They would be the first to advise against the use of the mannerism by anyone else. It would almost certainly be a fault in any golfer who attempted to copy it. Jim's lathy build may account for this mannerism, but no one who has seen him play will claim it prevents him from driving a long and accurate ball.

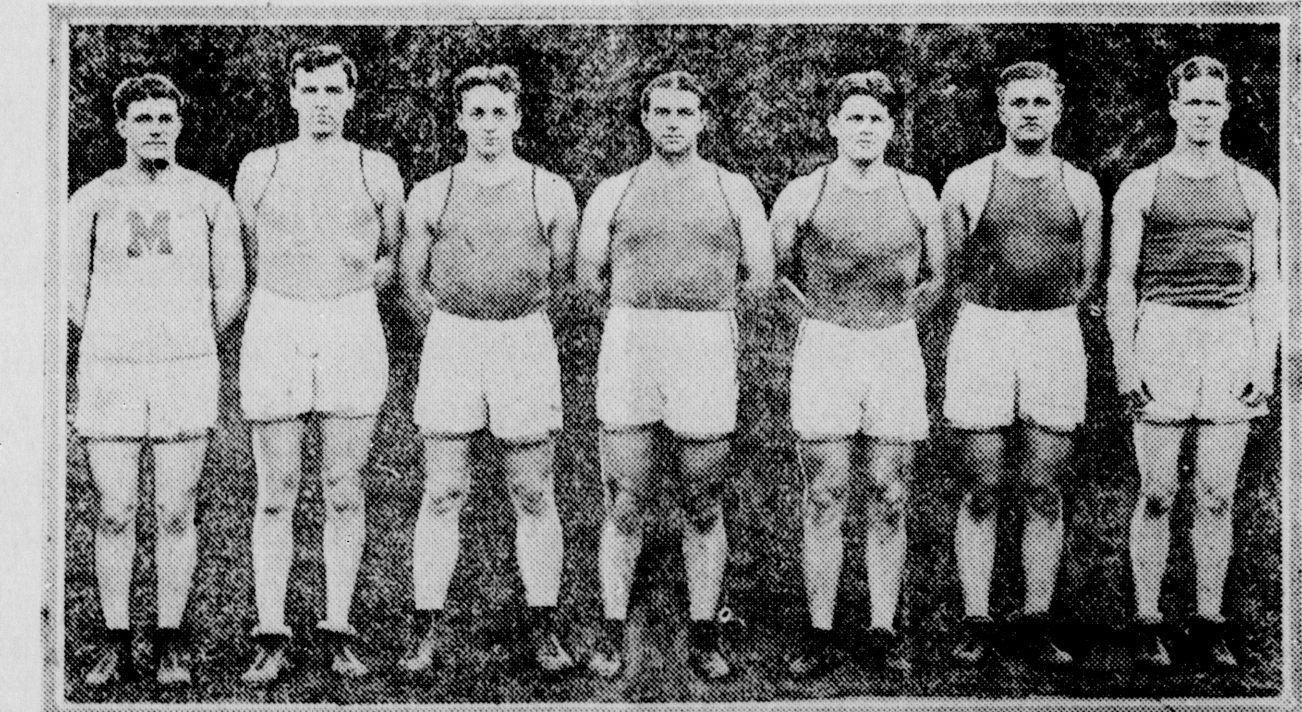

Any experienced golfer can identify a score or a hundred of his friends by their swings and at a distance where identification would be impossible by any other means. Perhaps every one of these golfers is a good player with an established swing. The main elements of the swing are the same in all. The mannerisms or individual peculiarities show the vast number of variations in a standard stroke. Yet all of them are right. The task of the beginner, then, should be to standardize his swing as quickly as possible. By the time he reaches the expert class he will have developed enough peculiarities so that he can be recognized at a distance by any of his friends.
